

through a window. There were no tests made of any of the contents of the house, except that he thinks a piece of a mattress that looked as though it had blood stains was taken and analyzed and found to have red paint. There were mattresses on the beds but no bedding; cobwebs about the house indicated to him that the ^{house} had not been in use. Later Lavine reported that after the murder a truck had backed up to the house and removed a quantity of stolen furniture.
